ABOUT THE AUTHOR

ROBERT C. FELLMETH, J.D., holds the Price Chair in Public Interest Law at the University of San Diego School of Law. A graduate of Stanford University (A.B. 1967) and the Harvard Law School (J.D. 1970), Professor Fellmeth has written or co-authored fourteen books and numerous articles on consumer, public interest, and children’s law subjects. From 1973 to 1982, he served as a state prosecutor (and as a cross-commissioned federal prosecutor from 1980–82), litigating a variety of cases, including child abuse criminal matters and antitrust civil trials and appeals. Professor Fellmeth founded the University of San Diego School of Law’s Center for Public Interest Law in 1980 and its Children’s Advocacy Institute in 1989, and serves as the Executive Director of the Children’s Advocacy Institute. He chairs the Board of Directors of Public Citizen Foundation in Washington, D.C.; chairs the Board of Directors of the Maternal and Child Health Access Foundation in Los Angeles; is a member of the Board of Directors of the National Association of Counsel for Children; and serves as counsel to the Board of Directors of the National Association of Child Advocates.

ABOUT THE DATA/ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The Children’s Advocacy Institute produced the majority of the data for the tables and figures. CAI acknowledges the excellent work of the California Budget Project in Sacramento, as well as the many individuals at state and county agencies who have helped with caseload, budget, and other program data during this and prior years. Foremost among these are the state departments of Developmental Services, Education, Employment, Finance, Health Services, and Social Services, as well as the Legislative Analyst’s Office. Individuals from many non-governmental organizations also contributed. CAI greatly appreciates the research and editorial assistance of USD law students Heather Boxeth, Jessica Heldman, Enrique Monteagudo, and Chris Parker, as well as USD undergraduate student Courtney Grant.
